COUNTRY NOISES.

Contradicting the Notion That All the Country Is Peace.

When the summer takes the turn we are at present suffering from, it is only make the discovery that the country today. does not, after all quite live up to its reputation. There are probably scores of reasons why various people, go to the country. A writer in the "Debats" went there to escape the noise of the town, only to find out that he had passed from the frying-pan into the fire. It is true that the invader of his quiet, an orchestra, had nothing characteristically rural except its conception of harmony and # fevoted persistence, but most places where men take their holidays have an embryonic orchestra, and even the pure countryside has its sounds as numerous and as constant as those of the city's

The song of birds is a pleasant enough thing, but not when the birds present it somewhere in the waste of dawn and banish sleep from the eyes of a man solved by mutual consent on August 31, banish sleep from the eyes of a man 1908. The business will be conducted who is trained to look upon eight o'clock by Isaac Peterson, who will pay all debts as a thoroughly healthy and early hour, and receive all money due the firm, but again, is rich in poetry, but it is harase. ing and even depressing to the towns-man, whom it sends into a succession of apprehension that the weather has broken and it is raining hard.

Country poises to the town-hred straner have this great disadvantage—they are unfamiliar. They may please by novelty, but are almost as likely to impinge upon the nerves because are not systematized and ear and brain have not become adjusted to teem. Of course the remedy is to stay long enough in the country to become adapted to the environment, but it is not everybody who is at liberty to apply this antidote. But it is not only in this matter of sounds that the country is inferior to the town; good townsmen, like Lamb, have proved conclusively its inferiority in all other respects for townsmen. Probably they drafted their proofs in weather like the present, and their converts reverted as soon as the wind banged its quarter, for even the most rigoted townsman knows that he really goes to the country to get out of the town, and, with all its faults, the country satisfies that desire.-Manchester
